A very traditional, detached Spanish country house, built on the ruins of an old cortijo, keeping all the charm and character pertaining to this style of property with wooden doors and windows, beams and thick walls throughout. At the rear of the property is a well located and completely separate self-contained apartment, again converted from the old property, making this an ideal property for rural tourism. The house is walking distance to the traditional village of Bermejo around 40 minutes north of Malaga and close to El Chorro. A large entrance hall leads into the property from the lovely large porch area, into a charming ground floor area, straight into a spacious, light and cool open plan layout with pillars giving the provision of distinct areas. A lovely snug/television room with a log burner placed on a pedestal gives a cosy place to relax. The kitchen is a good size with space for a kitchen dining area, and is decorated in traditional quality Andalucian materials, with brick and wood units, marble worktops and a ceramic double drainer sink. The stove is electric and there is a built-in electric oven. Also on the ground floor leading through a lovely arched doorway, there are two double bedrooms, and a shower room. Throughout the downstairs...
